EINSTEIN'S RELIGION NEARER TO CHRIST THAN TO MOSES, SAYS PSYCHO-ANALYST

In analyzing Einstein's credo in the current Thinker, Dr. E. Boyd Barrett points out its similarity to the philosophy of Christ rather than to that of Moses.

"Moses made laws and instituted a priesthood. Christ, on the other hand, was very impractical. He loved peace and cared more for the spirit than the law. He denounced and distrusted priests. He was cosmopolitan and anti-national.

"Einstein sees in churches the natural opponents of true religion. Christ found his bitterest enemy in the church of his day. Einstein's ethical code is based on the sympathy and culture implied in the golden rule of Christ, 'Love one another,' rather than on religious precept, as was the ethical code of Moses. 'The ethical behavior of man,' he writes, 'is better based on sympathy, education and social relationships, and requires no support from religion. Man's plight would indeed be sad if he had to be kept in order through fear of punishment and hope of reward after death.'"
